Small update.

Actually previous statement was wrong, the package build from ci.cor-lab.de install by default libboost1.46, which is not compatible with clang

I removed libboost1.46, and I successfully (but with lot of warning escaped by gcc) compiled with clang the following svn/git latest revision/HEAD version :

- rsc : some warning about an unused parameter in a function call
- nemomath : one recurrent warning about an unused parameter in a function call
- rci : lot of warning about some overloading of virtual function. It seems really nasty warnings

- liboncilla.

So :

- dependency of debian package should be checked for precise
- some of the warning could be addressed for the given project.

Applied in changeset r602.

r602 needs to be rolled-back, since breaking compatibility with rsb remote transport (could be resolved in rci-rst converters, but would decrease runtime-performance).
